... FORE NOTES ...

IN presenting "PICTORIAL PATERSON" to the public, the publishers aim to inform the outside world or non-residents who have not kept in touch with our enterprise and progress, that, notwithstanding the trying ordeals through which we have recently passed, the ravage of fire, the inundation of flood, and crash of tornado that have swept over us, leaving ruin and desolation in their wake, that we still live, and by dint of an indomitable will and unrelenting perseverance, have recovered from the disasters and their consequences, and defiantly await the coming of the unexpected in the future.

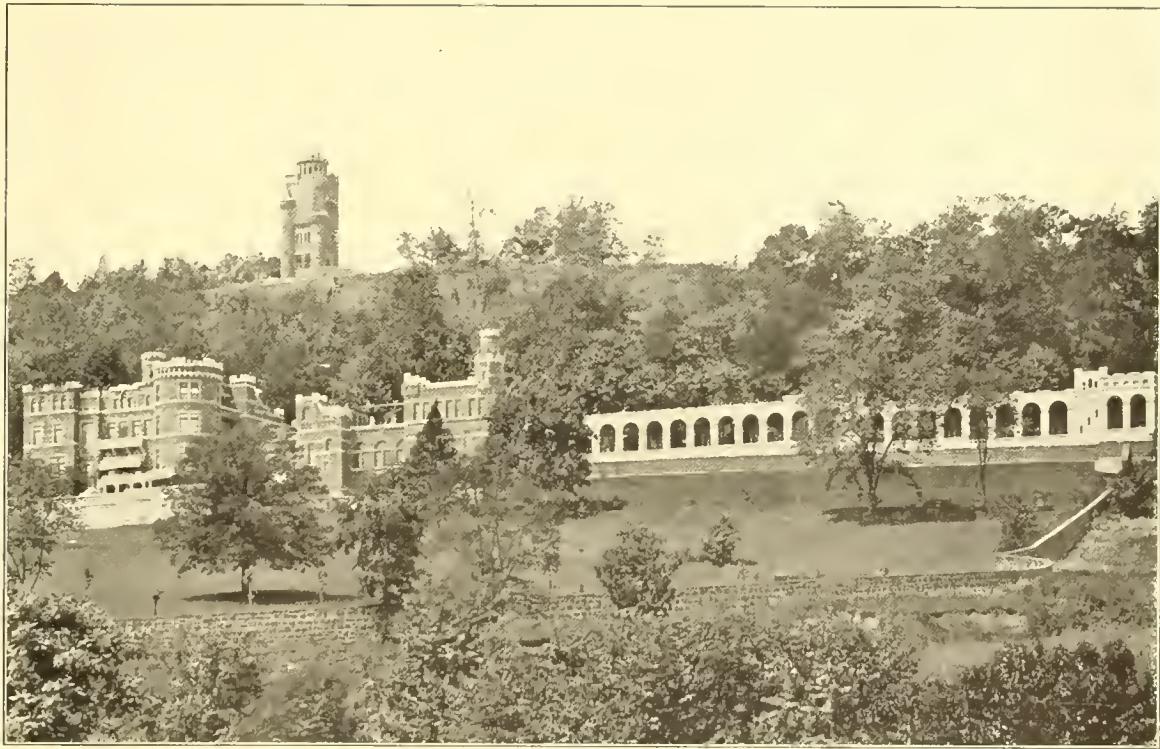

When calamities overtake certain communities, their effects overawe the inhabitants to such an alarming extent that they live in constant dread of an impending gloom. This is not the case in Paterson.

We are too busy here to worry long over misfortunes. The noise of the factory bell and the workshop whistle, the hum of a thousand mills and the rush of toiling throngs change the current of our thoughts, and the gloom of the past is forgotten in anticipation of a brighter future.

The illustrations in this booklet indicate mainly the public buildings, some of our progressive banking institutions, a few of our artistic churches, with a glimpse here and there of miscellaneous structures. No attempt is made to show the hundreds of handsome mercantile houses that have been rebuilt since the great fire, which, however, perform an important part in the construction of "New Paterson."

The above illustrations recall two of Paterson's foremost citizens and greatest benefactors. Through their penetrating foresight and untiring perseverance two great industries came into existence, and through their able and judicious management grew to be potent factors in the history of Paterson, and materially aided in making the city what it is to-day. They have long since passed from the stage of life, but are not forgotten.
